OBU is family.

That simple statement speaks volumes about our university. Throughout our history, Bison Hill has fostered a family atmosphere. In recent years, with many transitions as longtime faculty and staff members have retired, the concept of family has been challenged. However, we have been blessed with new members of the OBU family who are committed to maintaining the kind of environment that has helped us create a very healthy tradition of family-style caring.

In this issue of OBU Magazine, the concept of family is viewed from an array of angles. You will find a story about true family ties on page five, as we look at multi-generation OBU families, and how individuals have enriched their ties to their alma mater in unique and very successful ways. There are also ties to OBU family that can be found in relationships both in Oklahoma, and around the world. Jeff Click's innovative work as a college-aged entrepreneur has transformed and developed into building trend-setting homes for families who reside in the greater Oklahoma City area. Our alumni and friends are part of a very active OBU family in the state of Oklahoma. Since the early days of our university, the OBU family has extended beyond the borders of our state. Today, we are seeing a new branch of the family tree, as we have a growing number of students from other countries. Three of those students are featured in a story that begins on page 12. These Brazilian students came to OBU because of the family atmosphere on campus. It is an atmosphere that helps to ease the transition of attending college on a different continent.

Included as part of this issue is the annual President's Giving Report. In addition to the annual listing of donors, other features and profiles highlight individuals and families whose support helps keep OBU's momentum going strong. We hope these stories and information help to educate you, the OBU family, about how important charitable support of OBU is to your University and the impact that is made.

As the magazine was going to press, we lost two tremendous OBU leaders: Dr. James Hurley, OBU professor emeritus of biology and Lawrence Peitz, president emeritus of Tulsa Royalties Company. Both of these men lived lives worthy of the calling of the Gospel. The fall issue of the OBU Magazine will highlight their impact in more detail.

The concept of family continues to thrive at OBU. Dr. Hurley and Mr. Peitz exemplified this concept which is vital to maintaining the kind of environment where students can excel and where faculty can flourish. Thank you for being a part of our family.

ERY^{of} MARS

EXPLORATION IS PART OF HUMAN NATURE. On the winds of Enlightenment exhilaration, Magellan, Columbus and a host of others sailed the earth and chartered its seas and landmasses. With equal inspiration, scientists probed the smallest properties in existence to discover protons, neutrons and electrons. Biochemists unraveled some of the human mystery by defining the double helix, and the creative mind has simulated itself in our present age of computers and robotics. Archeologists unpack past civilizations, and oceanographers delve into underwater secrets. And JFK's speech to the moon, informed by all the history that Galileo spurred forward, summons a whole new era that has spilt human exploration onto all God's heavens. With the moon behind us, humanity's hunt to uncover the mysteries of Mars is in full throttle.

With watchful eyes, Mars has loomed as the devilish red star for many civilizations. Mars has never been liked. The Egyptians called him the "Red One" and the Babylonians thought it to be the "Star of Death." The Greeks named him Ares representing the god of war and blood, and Rome passes the tradition to our age in the name they espoused to him: Mars. Now, examples range from H.G. Wells' War of the Worlds to the Mars Bar to Marvin the Martian. Mars certainly has staying power, and this is especially true with OBU Professor of Physics Yuan-Liang Albert Chen.

While a graduate student, Albert began working with NASA's Johnson Space Center in Houston, Texas. Since coming to OBU in 1986 as a faculty member, he has continued to work with NASA each summer. His projects include working on the new space shuttle main engine diffuser investigation at Stennis Space Center, and fluid dynamics research for the STARS code at NASA Dryden Flight Center. But much of his work has centered on the Mars program, both at Johnson and the Kennedy Space Center in Cape Canaveral, Florida. Albert is excited that Mars has recently experienced renewed interest. "Space exploration (Mars) teaches us to be humble," he says. "We don't know everything, and we are not the center of everything going on in the universe. There's a lot of mystery."

Humility comes into mind when Albert hesitates to respond to questions of life on Mars, significant amounts of water on Mars, or if there may have been more life in the past. "The orbital parameter is most like Earth's when you compare it with other planets," he says. "A Martian day is similar to our 24-hour day, but the year is twice as long. There is some gravity but its measures only about 37.7 percent compared to Earth. There is some air pressure but Earth is 760 mb and Mars is only 6.9. There is much to be researched before we'll have definitive answers about Mars and what may have happened, if anything, on the planet."

Albert is hopeful that people will physically make it onto the Mars surface someday, although there are a number of challenges. "With the current technology the flight would take six months to arrive at Mars and the mission would be limited by when the orbit of Mars is closest to the earth," he says. "That means the mission would be limited to two weeks or last as long as six months. Either way, there is a six-month flight back. That amount of time in space is problematic."

Specifically, Albert is concerned with the dust on Mars and the characteristics of the dust. "There's a high concentration," he says. "It is a different size and mass. One of the other problems is the extensive dust storms that flair up, and we have very little knowledge when and why these storms take place." While at the Kennedy Space Center,

Albert conducted the research on the dust that can cause problems of build-up on solar panels, as well as other dust-related hazards, including charges that can come from the particles.

His work at NASA helps what he does most of the year in the OBU physics classroom. "I ask my students, 'When you're in your space suit for several hours, what happens when you have an itch on your face?' That's when they begin thinking, and that's an example of what has to be thought out. NASA places several foam pieces in the mask of the suit that the astronaut can lean his or her face on and relieve an itch." He encourages students to consider space as a profession, especially space medicine. "It's a field that we don't know much about and has tremendous opportunity for growth." Space exploration has long-reaching effects to life on Earth. Products from the satellite television to bar coding use technologies or materials that were originally developed for the space program. (A host of others are listed below.)

Albert is confident that his work is helping to answer several of the many questions concerning God's heavens and their exploration. In addition, perhaps his work will benefit everyday life here on Earth in ways we don't yet realize. ♦

I LEARNED THAT AT OBU.

The following
accounts are their reflections on the benefits of their OBU
education, lessons
they've learned, and the strengths of a supportive family.

JENIFER

The Daughter and Big City Consultant

As a young girl, I could feel the pull of the OBU family and the sense of shared vision, community, and support. When it came time for me to make a decision about colleges, I considered other schools, both in Oklahoma and elsewhere. I remember my dad telling me that he and mom would find a way to support me no matter what university I decided to attend. That meant so much because even though they were both active supporters of OBU, they continued empowering me to make independent decisions. In the end, I decided to attend OBU. I knew that I belonged at OBU.

Throughout my lifetime, my parents have always encouraged me to question and to explore why things are the way they are, what caused them to be, and what the implications are for me personally. They nurtured me as I was growing physically, emotionally, and spiritually. They also supported me and created the conditions that would allow the most learning to take place. This was true of formal education as well as of experiential learning. For example, when I was in high school, I wanted to get a job. I wanted to earn my “own” money. My parents wouldn’t allow it. At the time I saw this as bizarre. “School is your job,” they kept saying, “and that’s where you need to invest your energy.”

Now, living in New York City, I meet people in all kinds of circumstances, and I recognize better that I grew up blessed. Looking back, I clearly see my parents’ wisdom. I did work hard in school, and I always strove to give every effort. I learned to love school and to love learning. In part, that helped form my decision to continue my education by seeking a dual master’s degree at Vanderbilt University.

At graduate school I realized more fully the quality of education I received at OBU. I was accustomed to thinking critically and being challenged by professors. My OBU education is valuable both for the academic strength and for the spiritual support I received. It has enabled me to reach out and explore ideas and the world around me, and to do so eagerly, without fear. I first embraced my love for languages and foreign cultures at OBU. I cannot imagine my life without travel and the exploration of language and culture. At OBU, I encountered incredibly talented and supportive language professors who helped open my eyes to all that study of language and culture could offer. My life would not be the same without them.

Jenifer Henry, ’95, works as a consultant with the Hay Group, a global human resource consulting firm. She is based in New York City. Her role is to help support organizations in adapting the best ways to develop, manage, and grow the employees of their company.

KAY

The Mother and University Administrator

My roots are in Oklahoma and OBU. My maternal grandfather was a bi-vocational pastor and attended several seminars and conferences at OBU. Granddad spoke with great reverence and respect about the university. Following my junior year in high school, I attended a summer journalism workshop at OBU. That experience settled my decision to attend OBU.

Joe and I met and married as OBU students. Although Joe and I are the first members of our immediate families to graduate from college, our families valued hard work and personal accountability. A strong work ethic is deeply ingrained in us both. For us, this ethic evolved into an intense desire to pursue higher education.

OBU prepared me by strong academic programs, caring peers, and impressive, often inspiring, faculty members. For me, the value of an OBU liberal arts degree is the focus on learning to learn and on a basic background which prepared me to change and adapt skills along the way. Life is not static and neither is education for life; I learned that at OBU.

In our personal and family times with our children, we encouraged their curiosity, imagination, and sense of personal responsibility. OBU was the perfect environment for furthering their educational and spiritual growth. They had great experiences as peers and faculty members encouraged and inspired a pursuit of inquiry and investment of self in service.

I have been inspired by the friends and donors who undergird OBU through their resources. Their gifts to OBU often are a result of a lifetime of hard work and careful savings. Through their investment in OBU’s Kingdom work, these individuals provide support to equip generations of young people for service in a complex world. These folks honor God through their faith in His work in the lives of our current and future students. So yes, I am inspired – by their sacrifice, faith, obedience, and example.

Kay, ’69, serves as assistant vice president for development at OBU. She has also served in other capacities at OBU, including director of alumni, and a member of the alumni board of directors and the board of trustees. She has experience in preschool ministry and continues to write preschool Sunday School material for Lifeway Christian Resources.

At graduate school I realized more fully the quality of education I received at OBU. –JENIFER

JOE

The Father and Engineer

I first began classes at OBU after my discharge from the Air Force in 1963. I left OBU and pursued a job on the Air Force Eastern Test Range as a down range electronics technician. In 1970, I returned to complete a degree in biology and secondary education with a minor in chemistry.

Aside from broadening my factual horizons, my OBU experience added some maturity to my thinking processes. I would have to say that my habit already was to ask questions. Some of my friends were wont to say, "What's the purpose in it?" in a teasing fashion. That inquiring outlook was fortified by Jim Hurley's classes in biology, and his later statement, "If we want better answers, we must learn to ask better questions."

The Christian message is the only thing. I believe that if a person has not honesty and honor, he has nothing of value. That honesty and honor emanate from the love exemplified by Christ, who is truly our root. I dote on my children, Douglas and Jenifer, and I am gratified for who they are, but I don't take credit for their success as Christian citizens. If I have provided a backdrop, a stable launching pad, for them, then I have been a successful parent.

Joe, '70, has worked for Baker-Hughes Centrilift since 1975. He currently serves as a project engineer. Baker-Hughes Centrilift is the leading supplier of down hole oil well pumping equipment. Joe's main role is proposing engineering projects in a variety of disciplines related to company products, and once approved, to guide the projects to completion.

DOUG

The Son and Professor of Philosophy

When I was a child, OBU engendered in me a kind of awe-filled reverence for its hallowed halls and distinguished scholars. When I graduated from high school, OBU provided a perfect next step for me, one that enabled me to understand something of a legacy that was mine. At OBU, I encountered professors whose vision of God, understanding of human nature, and commitment to morally significant life far surpassed my own in breadth and depth. It did not take long to find my sense of what I might become reshaped by admiration of the community I encountered on Bison Hill, where an uncommon commitment to truth sustained a Christian faithfulness to which I aspired.

I was blessed to have parents who encouraged my curiosity. I asked questions and explored the world, seeking answers to all the wondrous puzzles that beset children. I quickly learned, following the model of mom and dad, to turn to books for insight. I cannot remember a time when I was not surrounded by books and magazines on all kinds of subjects, nor a time when reading was not the chief form of leisure activity in my family. In such an environment, it was impossible not to value education.

At another level, though not articulated quite in this way, my parents exemplified for us what St. Anselm describes as fides quarens intellectum, faith seeking understanding. I do not recall sensing as a child any wariness in my parents about asking questions. To wonder about life in all its dimensions simply expressed a natural response to the grandeur of God's good creation. In this way, my folks made it possible for me later in life to see learning as an act wholly consistent with my faith.

It's difficult for me to say, outside of immediate family, who else has especially shaped my life. However, I can think of persons whose influence looms large, even out of proportion with the time I spent with them. For one example, I recall an occasion in Washington, D.C., when I made my way home, struggling with more bags of groceries than I could easily carry. I encountered a homeless man who offered to help me "bear my burden." I was sure he was going to relieve me permanently of at least a few of my items. When we arrived at the door to my building, not only did he not make off with the goods, he declined to accept anything in return for his help beyond a word of appreciation. Though I do not know his name, he is a living reminder to me of the importance of believing the best and not the worst about others. He also reminds me of the extent to which I myself am a "charity case," in need of help from those I least expect by way of God's surprising divine economy. Has he impacted my life the most? Perhaps not, but he certainly made an abiding impression upon me.

Doug, '92, serves as an assistant professor of philosophy in the Honors College at Baylor University. He also is the director of Baylor's Institute for Faith and Learning. "It is sheer joy to help my students understand something of a heritage that is theirs unbeknownst to them, and to see them come to discern the development of a distinctive tradition of texts, ideas, institutions, and virtues that profoundly have shaped and still shape everything subsequent." He is married to Michele Howard Henry, '91, assistant professor of music education at Baylor. ♦

The Fellowship at IVENDELL

Many readers will remember Rivendell as the place in J.R.R. Tolkien's The Lord of the Rings, where the elves live and where Frodo receives comfort and preparation as he begins his journey. In Tulsa, Oklahoma, a church has adopted the name Rivendell. Dino Zaragoza, '92, is part of the pastoral team.

"In Tolkien's work, Rivendell represents a place of truth where you could see the truth about yourself, your mission, your story, as well as a place of preparation for the journey," says Dino. "We chose Rivendell Fellowship as the name for our church because we see ourselves as sojourners, a people 'sent' into the world to embody the Gospel through our own stories and everyday lives, and connect those stories to 'The Greatest Story Ever Told.'"

DIVENDELL FELLOWSHIP is completing their first year of existence as a postmodern congregation. What does that mean? Is that good, evil, or neutral? How is postmodern different from modern? Certainly “postmodern” is a weighty word that must be given definite parameters. OBU Assistant Professor of Philosophy John Mouracade provides a healthy outline to postmodern thought as opposed to modern thought.

Modernism and postmodernism are primarily philosophical stances vis-à-vis our ability and methods for discovering the truth. Modernism is characterized by the belief that humans can attain a wide ranging and complete body of knowledge either through experience, reason, or a combination of the two. Rene Descartes (1596-1650) is the leading figure in the modern era. Descartes was driven to find a proper foundation for scientific inquiry which would enable him to establish a system which was deductively certain and irrefutable. Though less well known, Francis Bacon was another influential thinker who ushered in modernism. Bacon, like Descartes, was primarily concerned with science. However, he sought verification of science through the utility of advances in technology rather than through deductive certainty. Bacon and Descartes thus coupled modernism to the Scientific Revolution. Descartes fathered the modern outlook known as rationalism, whose fundamental claim is that knowledge is obtained primarily through the operation of reason, while Bacon's thought lead to empiricism (developed by John Locke, Isaac Newton, and David Hume), the view that knowledge comes primarily through experience.

Postmodernism is the rejection of philosophical modernism, claiming that neither reason nor experience can provide knowledge. Postmodernists often emphasize the limitations of human perspective, experience, and reason, holding that since we are confined to a perspective, we have no non-perspectival way to verify our conclusions reached by experience or reason.

Postmodernism is a term that has come to mean many things besides the philosophical view described above. There is what may be described as the postmodern impulse, an approach to life that does not intentionally embrace a particular philosophical outlook, but embodies one nonetheless. (This postmodern impulse may be the driving force behind Generation X.) This type of postmodernism is tightly connected to existentialism. The central commitment of this ethic (way of life) is that each individual must define herself and build a worldview and lifestyle around the sense of self. It would be mistaken to conclude that this outlook is selfish. It is neutral with regard to selfishness. One may choose to be a giving and sacrificial person and build a worldview or lifestyle around that. The only imperative in the postmodern life is that individuals make choices for themselves and that these choices are predicated on what strikes one as fulfilling and meaningful. Perhaps the most accurate way to describe this way of life over and against the modern ethic is that in modernity people looked to the external world to discover how to live, but postmodernism requires a more introspective approach to life and life's decisions.

The light is dim as you walk into the rented space that becomes Rivendell Fellowship each Sunday evening. Candles and crosses line the walls. A long draped table stands in the front of a small auditorium. More candles, a loaf of bread and several chalices spread over it. On the stage, guitars, drums, and microphones are lined up in anticipation of the service.

The call to worship begins. A big screen flashes rapid-fire images in sync with the song's rhythm; they conclude with Jesus on the cross and the empty tomb. An expected program follows that includes announcements, scripture reading, prayer, sermon and benediction. But among these familiar program entries, Rivendell offers a few exceptional items that serve as examples of their core values. First, a discussion time is included as part of the service. It follows the sermon. Second, the Lord's Supper is offered each week. The congregation partakes by going forward and dipping the bread.

These two programmatic elements begin to express why Rivendell considers itself a church that seeks to work within the postmodern context. As John Mouracade points out, the postmodern context is "a more introspective approach." The discussion time that Rivendell incorporates into their service allows for people to ask questions, share their own thoughts,

"...people need to feel that their lives are not overly criticized or judged by others, but rather encouraged to discover their beauty, creativity, gifts, and talents, and given an invitation to become participants in the story of God."

ideas, agreements, and disagreements, as they struggle and grapple with the biblical text. In addition it provides an environment for people to learn from one another's personal devotion and discover God in community, which emphasizes the vibrancy and power of the Gospel as they learn to respond to God. "True community is built upon dynamic relationships," says Dino "and people need to feel that their lives are not overly criticized or judged by others, but rather encouraged to discover their beauty, creativity, gifts, and talents, and given an invitation to become participants in the story of God." Other activities include a weekly artist showcase through email, a participatory time for creative and artistic expression, and small discussion groups each week. In most services they include "Eye on the Nations," a time of reflection about the church globally. "This promotes a more global vision of the universal church as well as the diversity of the kingdom of God,” says Dino.

The Lord’s Supper each week represents at least a foot in the door of church tradition. However, to qualify it with what John Mouracade says above, the Lord’s Supper is chosen by Rivendell as the instrument to conclude their service more out of what is most “fulfilling and meaningful” to Rivendell as a group rather than purely identifying with the church traditions that celebrate communion at each gathering.

In addition to community and tradition, Rivendell views the church as primarily for believers. They understand the church not only as a place to share and confirm a believer’s story of faith, but a place to be equipped for the journey, a journey which leads them to embody the Gospel in the world in which they live. “As a result,” says Dino, “the church is not essentially a place we go to, but rather something we are. Rivendell desires to find ways to incarnate the Gospel within the culture context they live in. It is this tension that Jesus calls his followers to live in: you are in the world but not of it. Because of this missional teaching of Jesus we believe that all disciples of Jesus are called to be missionaries.”

Instead of formulating culture as an enemy, Rivendell believes that culture is neither friend nor enemy. “Culture shapes our lives, as we also are shapers of culture, and the Gospel must be fitted – not altered – to particular people, times, and circumstances so that evangelism can effectively occur. This makes the church as the bridge between the Gospel and culture, or, more accurately, a tightrope since a careful walk must be considered. In so doing, the gospel is lived out as a people together in community who neither wed the Gospel with culture, nor divorce it from culture. The first inappropriately elevates people and their agendas; the second stays hidden in the Christian sub-culture. God never called us to create our own culture. Rather, he calls us to be holistic.”

This lesson of “holistic” thinking is something that Dino learned through OBU. He is also completing his master of divinity degree through Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary on the campus of OBU. “OBU taught me the value of critical thinking skills, to be compassionate and understanding of people who hold different points of view, and the importance of learning to articulate our own thoughts and ideas,” says Dino. “In addition, OBU challenged me to think more globally. Courses like Western Civilization exposed me to a variety of literature, ideas, and philosophies which have shaped and are shaping our world today. As a church planter in a postmodern context this has been an invaluable resource for me, because I have a more broad holistic view and understanding of the world in which I live. Most importantly OBU has taught that I will always be a lifelong learner.”

Rivendell marks an exciting chapter in church work. The Rivendell story is still in infancy, but on the shoulders of the Christian tradition and in the midst of a thriving community, the work of Jesus is going forward and changing lives. ♦

There are four environments that make up Brazil. Many U.S. travelers may only be aware of one: the peaceful and festive atmosphere of Rio de Janeiro. Others may recall that Brazil is home to the Rain Forest, but the likelihood is a better acquaintance with the Rain Forest Café. Business travelers may have spent time in São Paulo, which is the world's second largest city, with more than 22 million people. And, perhaps some have flown to the other areas of Brazil, to the city of Cuiaba, Mato Grosso, for example. Between the beach, the high rise buildings, the rain forest, and the more rural areas, Brazil is approximately the size of the continental United States and has an eclectic mixture of sights and smells, peaks and jungles, faiths and traditions.

The Portuguese first arrived in Brazil in the 1500s. Little is known about its early civilizations. Without any war, Brazil became independent from Portugal in 1822. It is officially a Catholic country, but its diversity, both in faith and ethnicity, reflects the global community of today.

Mirrors of God

“Our father tells us that doctors are mirrors of God. He says that Christian physicians not only have the opportunity to relieve pain in the body but also the soul.”

Every year, Oklahoma Baptist University has the privilege of inviting students from other countries to experience Shawnee, Oklahoma, and pursue their studies at OBU. This year, Thais, Ive, and Lucas Coutinho, siblings from Cuiaba, Mato Grosso, are part of the student body.

“My first impression of Oklahoma was one of warmth – both the people and the climate,” says Thais, a sophomore pre-medicine major. Lucas is a freshman who is also interested in pre-medicine. Ive, a junior, is focusing on international business. With expectations of the “Wild, Wild West,” they were happily surprised to adjust to an environment much like what they are accustomed to. “I call OBU my home away from home,” says Ive.

Their transition has not been altogether easy. The perception that some Americans have of Brazil is certainly a challenge. Ideas range from thinking everyone in Brazil is utterly poor to the idea that the country is simply a big carnival. “Someone even came up to me and asked if I lived in a tree house in the Rain Forest like Tarzan,” says Lucas. “He was amazed when I told him that we had McDonalds and Wal-Mart.”

“Brazil is a very hospitable country,” says Ive. “The people are from everywhere. In fact the saying is that if you are fully Brazilian then you are from ‘everywhere.’ Everybody is welcome.” Thais agrees. “My best friend is Muslim,” she says, “and another good friend is Catholic. Diversity is normal in Brazil.”

Ive says that her mother actually introduced the family to the Christian faith. “Now, the whole family believes,” she says. Their father is an anesthesiologist and pain specialist. He works with many cancer patients as they struggle with managing their illness. As a result of his example and other doctors in their extended family, Thais and Lucas have their eyes set on medical school. Ive is set to go into international business in a likeminded way, to be a mirror of God.

"Our father tells us that doctors are mirrors of God," says Thais. "He says that Christian physicians not only have the opportunity to relieve pain in the body but also the soul. We learned that medicine is not a way to make a lot of money but a way to help people." "We want to humanize medicine," Lucas says.

The general similarities between the American and Brazilian cultures are perhaps just as revealing as some of the more notable differences. Among these differences, says Ive, is the interpretation of being "on time."

"In Brazil, time is different," says Thais. "If I invite you at six, don't come until six-thirty or seven o'clock because I won't be ready at six." They have found the expectation in America is much different. "At OBU, when a class period is ending all the students begin to pack their bags," says Ive, "but in Brazil it's not uncommon for teachers to continue teaching despite the time." The necessity to be to class on time is something they are adjusting to as well. "Neither the Brazilian way nor the American way is good or bad," says Lucas. "They're just different."

Dating is the exception to the relaxed time schedule. "In Brazil families are very strict about dating," says Lucas. "Before a young man can ask a young woman for a date, they must first ask the blessing of the father and answer the infamous, 'Why do you want to date my daughter?' question. The young man must understand 'the rules' that the father shares with him, and these cannot be broken. This is the time that you cannot be late getting home." Ive thinks this makes young men more respectful. "His family knows yours and your relationship involves both families," she says.

Another difference is the emphasis on family. "In Brazil everyone at work and in school comes home to eat lunch as a family. Families also eat dinner together each night. "We sometimes spend two hours at the table," says Ive. "It is the time where we discuss the day and talk about things." This intentional focus on family time creates a strong circle of trust. "Brazilian fathers cry," Thais says. "Dad suffers with you. Our dad calls us when we have a test or some other event. It doesn't make us independent because mom and dad are always concerned."

"Our father tells that he's the bow and we are the arrows, and Jesus is the archer," says Ive. "The arrow never stays with the bow and that as the bow is strong and flexible, he must help us fill God's purpose. Our mom never allows us to lose our focus. 'Whatever we do,' she says, 'do it for God's purpose – even being a good student is praising God.'"

In reflection of their time away from home, Thais, Ive, and Lucas each find the stories from Scripture comforting. "I think of the storm and Jesus in the boat," says Ive. "Right now the storm represents all the differences that are around me and the comfort to know his peace." Thais appreciates the passage about Abraham leaving to a foreign country with the assurance that God would be with him. "I know God is with me now," she says, "and that God is a God of all nations and we are part of the same family because we are united in Christ." Lucas recalls a song that is popular in Brazil. "It personalizes Moses and the Red Sea," he says. "If before me the sea doesn't open,' the song says, 'God will make me walk on the waters. My life will be surrounded by your power and with courage I will move the supernatural.'"

Thais, Ive, and Lucas Coutinho are three examples of the richness of the growing international student population at OBU. ♦

In March, President Mark Brister, Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs Jim Colman, and Dean of Enrollment Management Trent Argo toured several areas of Brazil. They met with students interested in attending OBU and discussed exchange opportunities with several different groups.

Awakening the World of

In 1992, a jury awarded Stella Liebeck $2.9 million dollars. It's an infamous case. She sued for damages associated with spilling a scalding cup of coffee onto her lap. Each year the Stella Liebeck Awards ranks the top 10 "most ridiculous" legal claims. The list is entertaining if not depressing. It ranges from someone suing a theme park for not warning them of lightning strikes, to a dog sitter being sued for losing a dog even when the dog was recovered. Despite the parade of outrageous cases and the exploitation of TV trials, the legal profession has a few shining examples of leadership so that we can say with Shakespeare, "The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept."

Law

"THE LAW HATH NOT BEEN DEAD, THOUGH IT HATH SLEPT."
– SHAKESPEARE

SEVERAL WHO ARE "AWAKENING" THE WORLD OF LAW ARE OBU GRADUATES. Pre-Law is a strong program at OBU, and many students who choose this path go on to great accomplishments. Law is more than about its suits; it's about its responsibility for morality that mazes through a game of chess to become a guide of significant value. Three graduates tell a portion of their story below of how their lives are making a difference.

A Moral Compass

"Providential or otherwise, graduating from OBU remains one of the best decisions of my life," says W. Kyle Tresch, '86, graduate of Washington and Lee University School of Law and now senior counsel at CITGO Petroleum Corporation based in Tulsa, Oklahoma. Through his experiences on the summer paint crew, late-night Taco Bells runs, afternoon naps, and campus concerts, Kyle built relationships at OBU. "I remember Laura Crouch and Shirley Jones teaching me how to write. I remember Dale Soden and Jim Farthing teaching me how to think critically. I remember Joe Hall teaching me about a diverse world outside of the one in which I was so comfortable. I remember Bob Agee showing us all how to lead with integrity and vision. And, I remember leaving OBU a more complete person than when I first got there."

Prior to his role at CITGO, Kyle served as shareholder/director with Oklahoma's largest law firm, Crowe & Dunlevy. "I have a concentration in treasury and finance, which also involves Securities and Exchange Commission compliance as well as multiple corporate governance issues," he says. "I have the opportunity in my position to work closely with senior management and the decision-making processes of a multi-billion dollar corporation."

Kyle counts his faith as central to his work as a lawyer. "The Bible warns that we cannot serve both God and money," he says. "Whether you consider Enron, the Baptist Foundation of Arizona or your personal income tax return, there are money-driven pressures and demands that constantly push to blur the lines between what is right and what is wrong. As Christians we're certainly not immune from those temptations. However, as Christians we are equipped with our faith and the accompanying promptings of the Holy Spirit to provide a moral compass when the distinctions between right and wrong become less clear. It's the nature of our job as lawyers to provide advice and guidance to clients who rely on our judgment in making decisions. Sometimes that means telling a client something they don't want to hear and sometimes that means saying things you don't want to say. It's not always easy and, being human, I've certainly made my share of mistakes in judgment. Nonetheless, I am able as a Christian to put faith in the prayer that our Father lead us not into temptation but deliver us from evil. I depend on this to help me face the challenges of being an attorney.”

He and his wife Lisa Jackson, '87, met at OBU. They have three children: Colin, 13; Erin, 12; and Alison, 3.

A Chess Game

“Litigation is often analogized to a chess game,” says Rob Duran, '98. “To play the game effectively, you have to think three moves ahead. In order to accurately think ahead, you need a keen understanding of logic. For me, OBU greatly enhanced that understanding.”

“I remember being very busy and constantly seeking new ideas while at OBU,” says Rob. He is a graduate of Vanderbilt University Law School and now works as an associate with the law firm of Fulbright & Jaworski L.L.P. in Houston, Texas, the largest Texas-based law firm. “I underwent significant philosophical, political, and religious changes during my OBU years, and I am grateful for the fertile environment which allowed those new ideas to blossom.”

Rob serves as a commercial litigator, which means his day is absorbed with securities litigation, securities arbitration, international arbitration, and complex commercial litigation. “Commercial litigation, especially as practiced in large markets, can be a dirty business. As a defense attorney you often see clients at their worst, largely due to the stress of being sued. Clients generally want you to ‘take on’ their problems and divine creative solutions. These facts, combined with the zeal to win at all costs and the money at stake, often create ethical dilemmas. I am fortunate that the attorneys I work with practice law in an honorable manner. Ethics undergird everything that I do as an attorney. My church and my spirituality are defining characteristics in my life. In fact, my faith is often the key factor that gets me through particularly difficult or stressful times at work. On good days, I’d like to think that I make some positive impact on the world with the work I do, or at least with the manner in which I conduct myself.

“For my career, the two most important skills that I developed at OBU are superior writing and critical thinking. Writing is paramount in the law and OBU’s rigorous writing program prepared me well for that challenge. Additionally, the critical thinking skills that I honed in college are indispensable to my practice. Understanding and being able to construct allusions to history, art, philosophy, and the social sciences are great aids in presenting the image of an educated person and communicating effectively. Likewise, my background in finance is well-suited for my specialization in securities and commercial law.”

Rob is married to Kellie Sperry, a 1999 OBU graduate. Kellie currently works as a recruiter for an oil and gas recruiting firm in Houston.

A Significant Guide

When Sonny Miller began looking for a law school, he received the pleasant surprise of not only acceptance into the University of Iowa College of Law with its top-25 ranking, but also the news that the school awarded him their top scholarship. “I was surprised and relieved to learn that OBU had not only prepared me for the challenges of law school, but also had prepared me to excel.” Sonny graduated as the top student in his law school class.

He first heard about OBU through his youth pastor and garnered more interest when he stepped foot on campus and learned about the national recognition for top academics. He is currently a senior associate in the wealth preservation practice group with the law firm of Winstead, Sechrest & Minick, P.C. in Dallas, Texas. “OBU provided me with keen analytical skills,” he says. “After college, you learn that the real lesson was not necessarily the subject matter before you, but rather the ability to think critically and process information. I am also thankful that OBU taught me to include my faith in that analysis, providing a firm ethical and moral foundation beneath my feet. The quality faculty cared about me both as a student and as a person. They taught me more than their designated subject matter, and challenged me to discover deeper truths about myself and the world around me. I am grateful to have had the opportunity to pursue that discovery process within the context of a Christian educational institution.”

Sonny assists people with the preparation of wills and trusts and other related estate planning documents to provide for their families in the event of their death, with an emphasis on high net worth individuals and tax planning issues. He also helps families navigate through the estate administration process after the death of a loved one. “There have definitely been occasions where I was able to encourage a client or co-worker in his or her faith or to think about planning for the soul as well as for finances,” he says. “I believe that our faith is also expressed in our workplace by our work ethic. As a Christian, I believe it is important to do the best at whatever task God has put before us. Unless we are consistent and hard-working, I don’t think that others who work around us will respect our beliefs or be drawn to Christ by our example.”

Married for eight and a half years, he and his wife, Amy, are parents to their son, 3-year-old Parker. ♦

Outdoor Classroom

OBU's Outdoor Classroom provides students hands-on experience in a wide range of topics. A large biological and ecological area on the north side of the campus is the context for science students to study Oklahoma habitat and geological features. "The Outdoor Classroom is for environmental science, earth science, and botany classes," says Assistant Professor of Natural Sciences John McWilliams. "Most of the 50 students who take the class each semester are teacher education majors."

The class began using the property about four years ago, and John has gradually developed a curriculum to exhaust its capabilities. "You may get cold, hot, wet, tired or scratched up, but after all, it is a jungle out there," John says. Despite the uncertainty of nature, students know they are contributing to local conservation study. During the semester, students may build nesting boxes where habitats of local bird species are monitored, tend to native plant restoration, conduct water quality surveys, or study populations of aquatic organisms through plankton sampling.

Pre-Concert Lectures

Little did Kristen Stauffer Todd know that the pre-concert lectures she began delivering as a doctoral candidate at the University of Kentucky would continue when she began teaching at OBU. Kristen's pre-concert lectures have become a highly anti-pated and welcome addition to the Fine Arts concert series.

"I thought it would be a good thing for our students if we offered them some information before selected concerts – something designed to help them familiarize themselves with the styles and composers on each concert," she says. "The goal is to make the music come alive for the audience and to enhance their understanding and enjoyment of what they hear in the concert that follows."

During the spring semester, Kristen presented pre-concert lectures for the Concerto-Aria concert, and the Oratorio.

High Marks for OBU Nursing

Emily Vanlandingham
Nursing Student

OBU's School of Nursing has recently been approved for a full eight years of accreditation by the National League for Nursing Accrediting Commission. "This is the longest period of time accreditation is awarded," says Lana Bolhouse, dean of the School of Nursing. "The accrediting panel ruled that we met all criteria and standards of NLNAC for baccalaureate education. We were the first program in Oklahoma accredited by the National League for Nursing. That was in 1960," Lana continues. "The continuing accreditation decision by NLNAC is in keeping with excellence in nursing education, a characteristic of the OBU School of Nursing."

Theatre for Young People: From Brer Rabbit to Huck Finn

OBU's Theatre for Young People, founded in 1993, is a unique program that not only provides experience in children's literature for theatre students, but also provides the community with the art of live theatre for young children.

"The first play we produced was Brer Rabbit Tales," says Assistant Professor of Theatre Laura Byland. Since that time, more than 22,000 elementary children have attended plays at OBU. The most recent play, Huck Finn, was attended by close to 3,000 students. "Our mission is to produce plays that will engage audiences in grades K-6 in the art of live theatre. Our plays are chosen from the best available scripts and for the values in their themes, including honesty, integrity, and preparing young people to recognize good and evil in the world. We believe a love for the arts must be nurtured in the early years and that the young deserve theatre rich in content," Laura says.

In addition, OBU Theatre for Young People strives to produce live theatre that offers audiences a good story that holds the interest of the audience from beginning to end. The story must also have literary value, enriching vocabulary and ideas that challenge the audience. Laura also believes in offering audiences credible characters, and visual effects that stimulate the audience through use of scenery, costumes, and lighting. "We offer stimulating ideas that give the audience an opportunity to think about their own values and attitudes. We create a shared social experience of theatre and we provide the audience with material for discussion and response. The audience is afforded the opportunity to see and learn about other people from different cultures because our characters from different places come alive on the stage and often make an indelible impression."

OBU English Students Recognized at National Convention

OBU's Chi Delta chapter of Sigma Tau Delta (International English Honor Society) was founded in 1942. Since that time, the chapter has earned accolades including an increasing number of invitations to read papers at the national convention. In the past five years the group has had at least three presenters each year. Last year, Brent Newsom won an honorable mention at the national convention for his paper on Salman Rushdie's Midnight's Children, and Elissa Jones won the Sommerville Scholarship for prospective teachers. This year, six students participated in the national convention, which was held in March in Daytona Beach, Florida.

The OBU chapter also publishes Scriblerus, a literary journal. The 2001 edition of Scriblerus won the Outstanding Literary Arts Journal Award at the convention. Assistant Professor of English Sidney Watson is the group's advisor. "One of our students, Amber Mitchell, is planning to run for southwest representative at this year's convention," says Sidney, "and I'm running for southwest regent. That means OBU may have two representatives serving on the board of regents for Sigma Tau Delta next year."

Biking Bison Support Fine Arts

The Bison Bicycle Tour, in its fourth year, has raised about $1,000 every year for the Fine Arts scholarship fund, according to Associate Professor of Music James Vernon, founder and organizer of the event. The tour offers several options: a 50-mile tour going east to Earlsboro, then north, then west to McLoud and back to Shawnee; the 25-mile ride goes back and forth to McLoud; and the 10-mile ride takes riders through downtown Shawnee. "We have more participants each year. Last year, we had about 60 participate. Most riders do the 50-mile ride, but we have a number who do all three," says Jim.

Studying US-Arab Relations

In April a group of OBU students met with other university students to participate in the National Model Arab League in Washington, D.C. Professor of History Glenn Sanders went with the students as the faculty advisor.

Glenn Sanders

At a political science simulation sponsored by the National Council on US-Arab Relations, students assume the role of Arab diplomats at a meeting of the League of Arab States. Through formal debate and informal discussion, students attempt to build consensus with one another on resolutions that address the same issues with which Arab leaders wrestle every day. Since 1984, the Model Arab League has helped students develop leadership skills such as public speaking, debate, critical thinking and diplomacy.

OBU Nursing Students in Haiti Help at the Hospital of Hope

An OBU group narrowly missed seeing chaos and violence when they returned from a trip to Haiti in January. The country was experiencing increased demonstrations and signs of political unrest. Since 1984, nursing students have traveled to Mexico, the Dominican Republic and Haiti. This year, eight students, an OBU graduate who works at Children's Hospital in Oklahoma City, and two nursing professors, Jasmin Johnson and Martha Hernandez, traveled to Haiti.

In Haiti, students worked with the Hospital of Hope, an orphanage and chronic care facility for children. Since 1988, the organization has adopted out more than 800 children to families in the U.S., Canada and Europe. The students performed Denver Developmental Screenings, which test development and fine motor skills in children. They also assisted with deliveries and assessed the health of newborns.

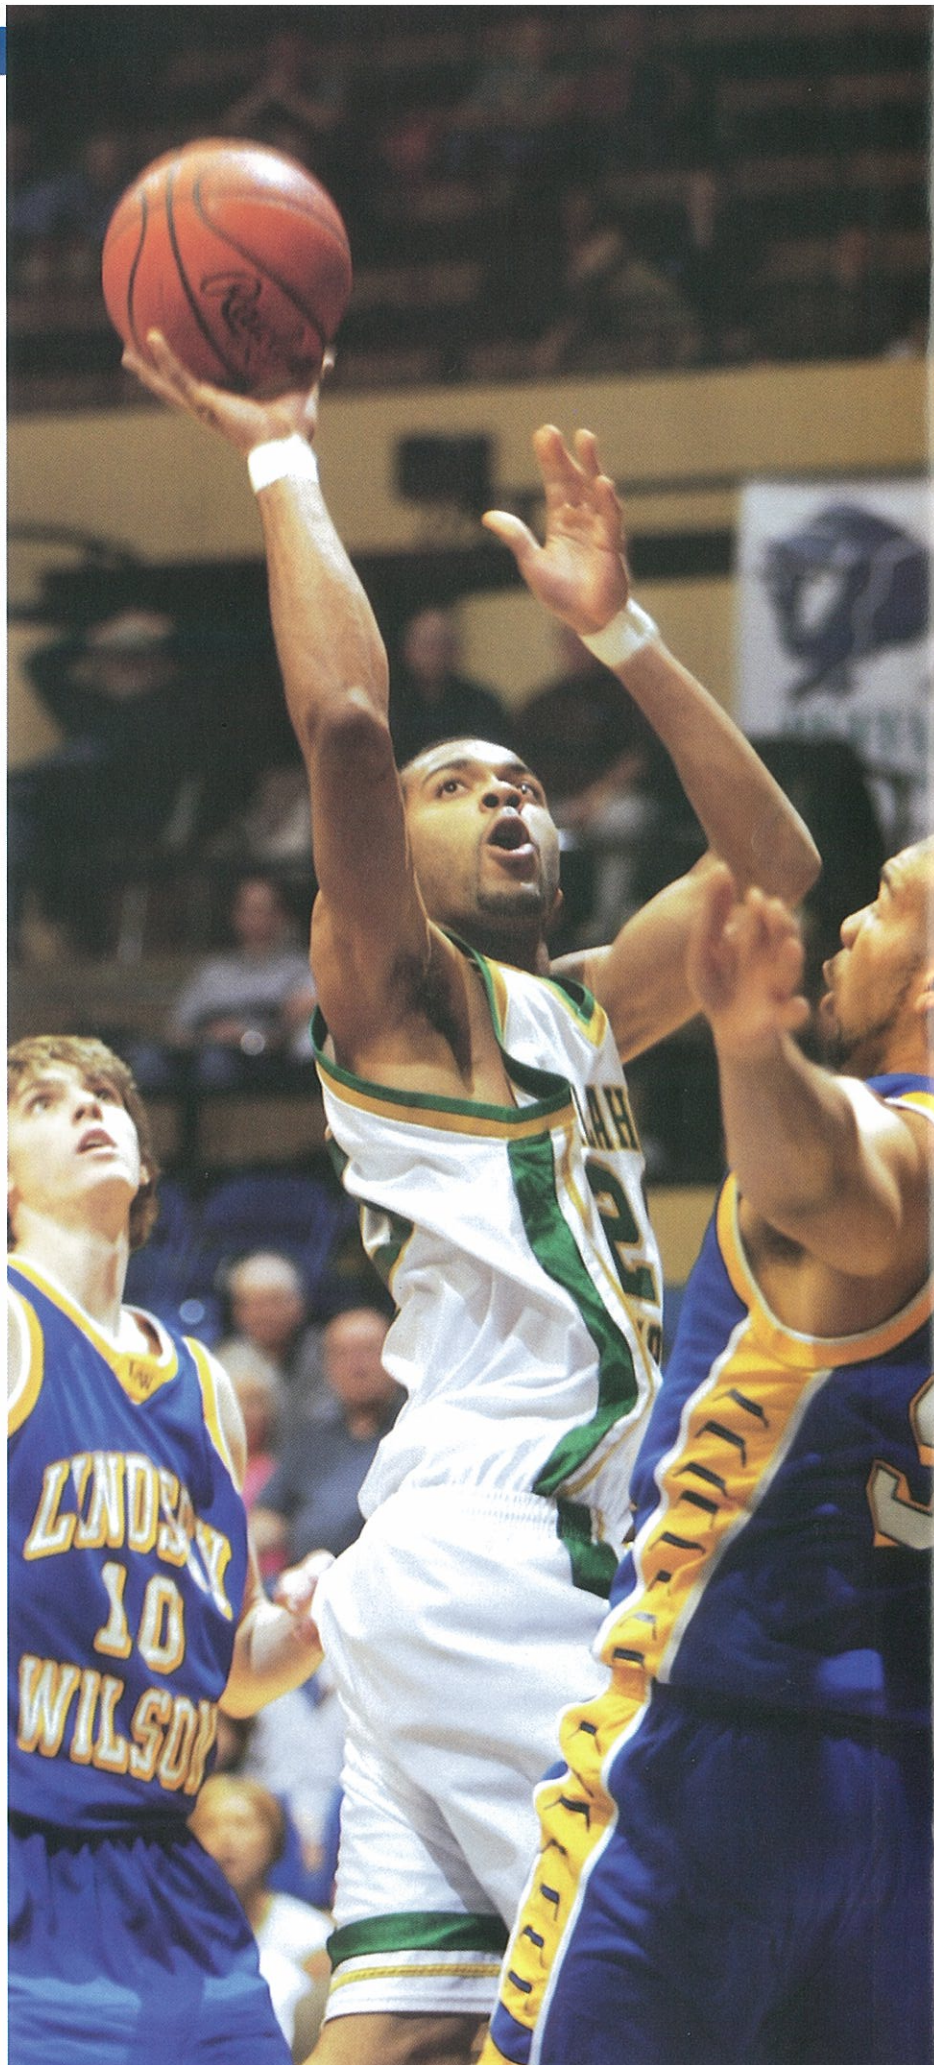

When the group found out that the airport was closed because of the demonstrations, they knew they needed to quickly exit the country. When they contacted the airlines, only 12 seats were available. They needed 11. So, after 13 days of service, they decided to take the remaining seats on the airplane and make it home safely. Haiti continues to experience unrest, but the work at the Hospital of Hope continues, a work that is shared by the OBU School of Nursing both in service and in prayer.

Playing Out a Dream

By SOPHOMORE DAVID NOBLETT

"Coach Tolin usually comes and talks to us before the game. That night, he came and talked to me first."

Adam Hawkins enrolled at Oklahoma Baptist University with a dream of one day playing professional basketball. But the dream took a nightmarish turn that may have stopped most young men.

It was supposed to be a normal night of basketball in the Noble Complex on the campus of Oklahoma Baptist University. The Bison were gearing up to take on Messenger College on the Friday after Thanksgiving of 2002. Adam Hawkins, then a junior at OBU, was going through his normal routine of getting ready for the game when he got some unexpected news.

"Coach Tolin usually comes and talks to us before the game. That night, he came and talked to me first," Adam says. "He told me that one of my family members was outside. I thought I was in trouble at first. Then I went out, and they told me my dad had passed. I went into the locker room grabbed my stuff and walked out. Justin Royce chased me down and prayed for me before I left," said Hawkins.

Adam's father, Ananias Hawkins, died of a heart attack on Nov. 29, 2002. Ananias was a bishop at Unity Christian Center in Oklahoma City, where the Hawkins family had attended for more than six years. Adam's mother, Susan Hawkins, is also an ordained pastor at the church. Adam is one of seven children. Kourtney (25), Derrick (23), Toya (19), A.J. (18), Brittani (14), and Shawonda (11) are all a big part of his life.

That first night, Adam went home to be with his family. The following night, Adam decided to return to OBU. With his family in the stands, he scored 12 points in a win over Huston-Tillotson.

"My dad had a great influence on me," Adam says. "He would call me and check up on me and came to watch all my games, home and away." Even when the team traveled to Kansas City for the National Tournament in 2001-02, Ananias and some of the Hawkins family drove from Oklahoma City every day to watch and cheer for Adam and the team.

His friends at OBU have helped him along the way. "David Williams would call every day to see how I was doing," he says. "After practice or after school, I would drive all the way home. The rest of my teammates sent me cards and even the women's team sent cards to tell me it would be all right. Dr. Cragin actually prayed for me in class, and sent me things in the mail."

When Adam thought about quitting school and basketball altogether, his mom's insistence provided the cause he needed to continue. In March, he finished his last season with the basketball team. Among his achievements as a player is scoring 1,000 points. He graduated with a degree in business management in May, something he may return to later. But for the present, Adam is pursuing a career in professional basketball. "My dad told me that nobody can stop me from doing anything but me," he says. "He taught me that no matter what the situation may look like, work hard and anything can happen." As he steps into the future, he also takes along his faith that has grown since he accepted Christ at age 9 through his time at OBU. ♦

It only takes a spark.

Remember that tune?

"It only takes a spark to get a fire going..."

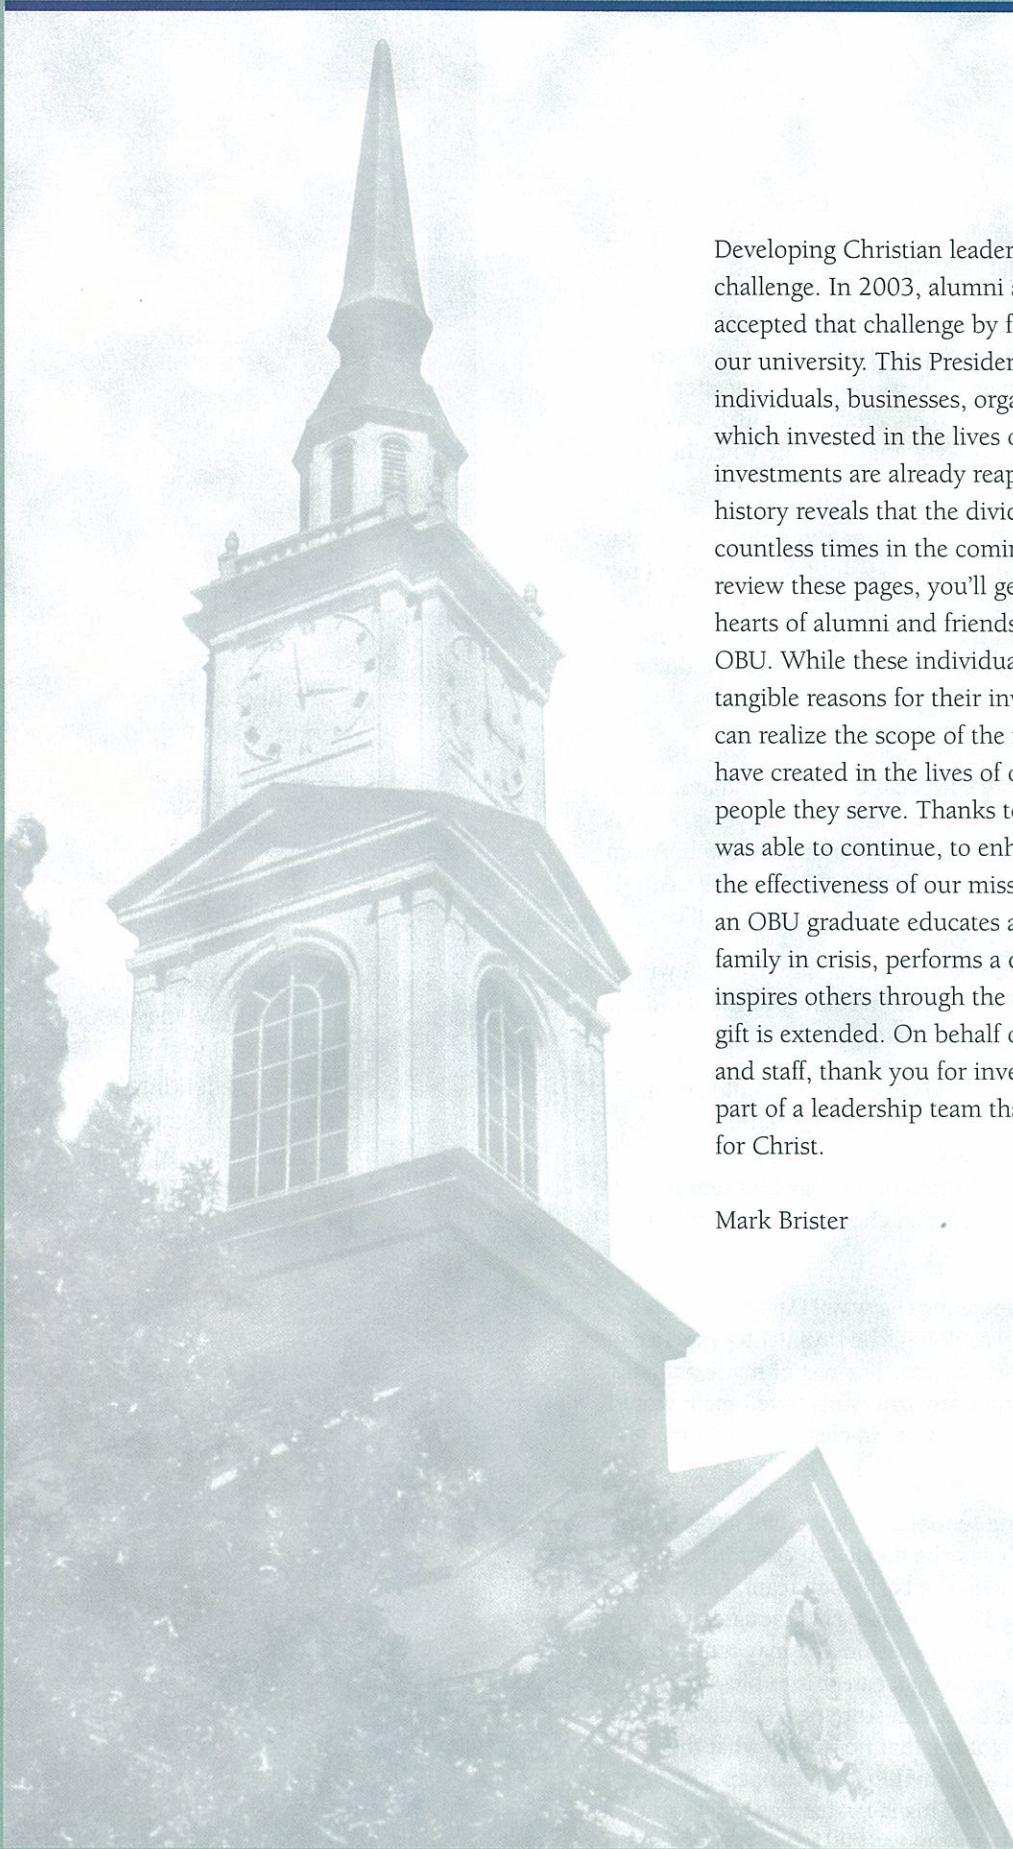

The concept is certainly true when it comes to high school students who are interested in OBU.

We want to encourage you to pass on your knowledge about OBU. When you find those who have an interest in attending a Christian college, let us know. We'd love to send them information about OBU. If you need copies for group events, let us know that too.

Shine at OBU

Developing Christian leaders is a significant challenge. In 2003, alumni and friends of OBU accepted that challenge by financially undergirding our university. This President's Report lists names of individuals, businesses, organizations and churches which invested in the lives of OBU students. Those investments are already reaping dividends. Our history reveals that the dividends will be multiplied countless times in the coming decades. As you review these pages, you'll get a glimpse into the hearts of alumni and friends who actively support OBU. While these individuals can articulate tangible reasons for their investments, none of us can realize the scope of the intangible benefits they have created in the lives of our students and the people they serve. Thanks to your leadership, OBU was able to continue, to enhance, and to expand the effectiveness of our mission in 2003. Each time an OBU graduate educates a child, ministers to a family in crisis, performs a delicate surgery, or inspires others through the arts, the impact of your gift is extended. On behalf of our students, faculty and staff, thank you for investing in OBU. You are part of a leadership team that is touching the world for Christ.

Robert and Traci Morris

Vice President of Administration for Braden Manufacturing – Tulsa, Oklahoma

Homemaker with 4-year-old daughter

Both of us were impacted significantly from our education, experiences, and opportunities provided by OBU. We believe in the university's mission to provide a biblical worldview and yet provide a high caliber education. It is this mission that encouraged us to invest in areas which will have an eternal impact. Since our degrees were in the area of education and business, we wanted to invest resources back into these specific areas. Thus, we've concentrated giving toward a business school scholarship and toward a faculty development endowment. Investing in OBU provides an opportunity to multiply one's impact on the world for Christ due to the mission of the University. You can be assured that your resources are going toward preparing young people for ministry regardless of their career vocation.

Traci Morris

Before staying home with our 4-year-old daughter, I taught first grade for four and a half years. During this time, I taught in both a lower income level area and a more affluent area. The training I received at OBU prepared me for the very different teaching environments of these schools. You are more than a number at OBU and don't get lost among the crowd. Smaller class sizes and low student/teacher ratios are some of the main reasons I chose OBU over other universities.

Robert Morris

My undergraduate business school education at OBU opened up numerous opportunities to be in the career I'm in today as vice president of administration for Braden Manufacturing, LLC in Tulsa, Oklahoma. It was at OBU that I ventured out of the United States for the first time to teach ESL to students in Urumqi, China. This opened my eyes to international business and led me to spend my first year after OBU in Moscow with Global Options Inc. Since that time, I've traveled and worked all over the world and today am much better prepared for the global market Braden operates in as a result of the opportunities afforded at OBU. At Braden, we design, engineer, and then fabricate gas-turbine power plant equipment all over the world.

OBU provided me with an excellent education in a small Christian environment. I strongly believe that OBU needs to continue to provide a Christian education to prepare students for life's challenges beyond college. OBU needs to continue to carry out its mission in promoting solid academics in a Christian environment. Money is critical to meeting that objective.

Mikles Marketing and Management

For 20 years I have felt led to give two annual scholarships to English majors in honor of Shirley Jones. Dr. Jones was an outstanding OBU English professor. Her method of teaching and her passion inspired me greatly.

At OBU, each student is a person not just a number on a roll. The personal care and attention provided by the professors is amazing. They really care about their students.

Anyone who has the opportunity to support the mission of OBU should do so because the gifts OBU receives always remain with the university to allow for the highest quality instructors, cutting-edge resources, and up-to-date facilities.

Judy Howard, '66

Owner of Buckboard Antiques and Quilts in Oklahoma City

My mother was an OBU alum (Louise Chappell Steiger, ex '33). She and my father established the John and Louise Steiger Student Foundation Scholarship at OBU. It was my privilege to honor my father and mother recently by contributing a tithe of my inheritance to the fund, not only in their memory to perpetuate their commitment to offering quality Christian education, but as a legacy for the many students who will be helped in the future.

After graduating a semester early from OBU in 1966 in business and education, I attended OSU to start a master's program. I quickly realized what a quality and in-depth education I had received at OBU. I also enjoyed the small friendly campus where you were known and felt loved and I had a feeling of acceptance and belonging. You certainly don't get the personal attention and help from the professors in classes of 100 as opposed to the five-to-20 class size at OBU.

Judy's two sisters also attended OBU. Janet Addison, '62, is a counselor for Care Net Pregnancy in Lorena, Texas. JoAnn Jones, ex '59, is a sales coordinator for Juice Plus in Dallas, Texas.

Bill Ford

CEO of Shawnee Milling Company, a company his grandfather began in 1908.

My granddad helped bring OBU to Shawnee, and I am just so proud of OBU. OBU is a great asset to Shawnee and to the state of Oklahoma. OBU is so strong in its Christian principles and also in its academics that students go on to do great things. For example, I have had the privilege of seeing the School of Business really blossom and its influence increase.

Ramona Farthing

Retiring Professor of French

What I've enjoyed most here at OBU is working with talented and eager students. Equally important has been working with colleagues who work hard and have helped me stay intellectually challenged.

I support OBU financially and urge others to do so because OBU depends a great deal on gifts from individuals in order to maintain our quality in every domain - faculty, campus upkeep, housing, etc. Without such gifts we could not keep doing the job we are doing.

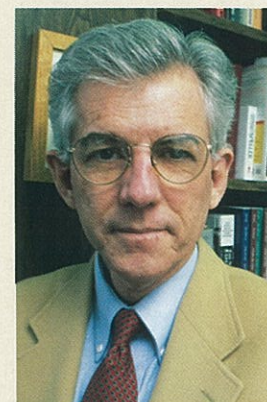

Jim Farthing

Retiring Professor of History

Over the years OBU's physical facilities on the campus have expanded and improved greatly, and I believe that on the whole the professional qualifications of the faculty have improved consistently.

Teaching at OBU makes one aware of how much impact the university can have on individuals and their futures. It also makes one intensely aware of the needs that the university has and the way financial support can enhance the university's ability to serve students and other constituencies.

I would encourage others to financially support OBU because when gifts are made to OBU, the money goes where the contributor intends. I think OBU does an excellent job in discussing its needs with potential givers so that the contributor's desires can be matched with genuine needs at OBU.

H. Earl Bengs, '56, has learned many important lessons through the years, both as a student at OBU and as a missionary serving around the world.

During the summer of 1953, Earl was part of a Tentmakers team that spent the summer in Fortuna, California. "Our work was to help the new church build a new building as well as do evangelistic work. We worked the second shift in the sawmills to support ourselves," he says. "I learned that God is faithful to us in our obedience. A faithful witness by word and especially in lifestyle leaves a positive impression in the minds of those among whom we work."

Earl was part of a youth evangelistic team the following summer. "That summer was spent in different churches. My wife-to-be gave her blessing to twice postponing our wedding in 1954 so I could be with another church. We were finally married in October 1954.

"Through the years, I have learned that God is faithful. When we depend on him and obey him, he allows us to share in what he is doing much beyond our own capabilities," Earl says. "I have also learned to wait on the Lord for his choice of a marriage partner. My wife and I will celebrate 50 years of marriage this October."

Upon graduation from OBU, Earl was called as pastor of Vici Baptist Church in Vici, Oklahoma. He served two years then moved to First Baptist Church, Mooreland, Oklahoma. "In both of these churches, God put us in places that were less than harmonious. We began to consider overseas missions, but we could not sense God's call. I learned again that God is faithful. He brought the people of the church together in love and forgiveness and blessed them. We look back on the experiences in those first two pastorates and see that all God leads us to do is part of his immediate plan but also part of his preparation for the future."

Three months after Earl began serving as pastor of First Baptist Church, Cheyenne, which he calls "an opportunity to serve among people whose natural bent and history was to love their pastor and work together alongside him," the Bengses experienced separate and very distinct calls to the mission field. And even in this call, there were lessons: "God is sovereign. We must work off of his schedule and not our own. God is gracious. He allowed us a very good time of rich fellowship with people whom we still have contact and fellowship today. He also put us among people who not only affirmed us in our call but helped us financially to make our move to seminary to begin the next phase of our preparation for overseas service."

The Bengses studied at New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary from 1963-67, and were appointed as missionaries in August 1967. Their first assignment was in Vietnam, where they worked in the city of Dalat until Vietnam fell to the communists in April 1975. "After our departure from Vietnam, we spent several months in Guam helping in the resettlement process for the Vietnamese who were coming to the United States," he says.

Upon completion of their responsibilities in Guam, the Bengses began an outreach to the Iban (Sea Dayak) people of Sarawak until the government made a decision in November 1976 that missionaries would no longer be allowed to live and work there. They returned to the U.S. in June of 1977 for a year of furlough "and to seek the next step in God's plan for our lives."

That plan came for the Bengses in September 1977 when they journeyed to Singapore as part of a new outreach to high-rise dwellers. Earl served as director of that ministry for two years and then was named coordinator of church planting. He resigned in 1989 to return to the U.S. for a one-year assignment and to prepare for the next phase of ministry. "We learned that our abrupt departure from Vietnam and the sense of loss we felt reinforced our awareness of the faithfulness of God. Learning difficult Asian languages, and working in different cultures have constantly refreshed our memory that the one who called us is the faithful one."

They returned to Asia in January 1990 and settled in Taiwan for a year and a half for language study. They left for Singapore in June 1991 and have been involved in working among the Hokkien-speaking people. Their work is in evangelism, church planting, and leadership development. "I have also had the opportunity to work with separate churches to help bring healing, health and hope during times of stress between the pastor and the people. It is a great joy to see these churches moving ahead and bearing a faithful witness in Singapore today.

"OBU provided a wonderful, nurturing opportunity for me. Mrs. Opal Cole influenced my life most strongly. She called on me to be myself, develop my gifts and respond to my call in the most positive ways. Whatever strengths I may have today in the area of public speaking and in preaching clearly, I attribute to her influence."

The next great challenge for the Bengses is to lay the groundwork and do leadership training in North Sumatra, Indonesia. We will have to wait to see what lesson he learns next.

Peggy Donovan '53 Bill Donovan '55

It was a classic boy-meets-girl story for the Donovans. Texas-born Bill Donovan, '55, came to OBU from Oklahoma City and met Shawnee native Peggy Gallo-way, '53. Their first kiss was on the OBU campus, and Bill proposed to Peggy on the lawn in front of Shawnee Hall.

Peggy completed her freshman year at OBU in 1947, and then moved to Memphis, Tennessee, where she entered nurses training at Baptist Hospital. In 1952, after she passed her state board exams, she came back to OBU as one of the campus nurses. The Donovans married in August 1953. Bill was still a student and also served as pastor of Musson Baptist Church, east of Shawnee.

From Shawnee, they moved to Fort Worth, Texas, where Bill pursued a master of divinity degree, and in between child rearing, Peggy supported the growing family by working as a nurse. The Donovans returned to Oklahoma in 1959, and Bill was pastor of Vamoosa Baptist church near Konawa while Peggy "trained three small children in the ways preachers' kids should act."

From Konawa, they moved to Leedey, where Bill was pastor of First Baptist Church, and Peggy was a homemaker and an unofficial rural healthcare provider. He was called as pastor of First Baptist Church, Erick in 1966, and spent one day a week in Oklahoma City assisting the chaplain at the Baptist Medical Center with group counseling. "That was when I became convinced my future was in chaplaincy," says Bill. Peggy worked at Sayre Hospital part time.

The Donovans then moved from rural Oklahoma to Houston, Texas, where Peggy worked at Baptist Memorial Hospital East and Bill was a chaplain intern at the Institute of Religion, Texas Medical Center, and at the Texas Department of Corrections. "I had no interest in pursuing work as a prison chaplain at the time," says Bill, "but it became a major element of my career in ministry."

From 1970-73, the Donovans worked together at Valley Baptist Hospital in Harlingen, Texas, where Bill was chaplain and coordinator of the volunteer staff and Peggy was in-service director. They moved to McAllen, Texas in 1973, when Bill accepted the pastorate at Trinity Baptist Church in McAllen. Peggy began work as a staff nurse at McAllen General Hospital and was soon promoted to in-service director.

Bill went to McAlester, Oklahoma, in 1975, where he assumed the position of senior chaplain at Oklahoma State Penitentiary. Now, Bill and Peggy had three children in college and one in graduate school, and Bill began to pursue a doctorate while Peggy worked as a staff nurse at West Hospital. When a new Regional Hospital was built she was named in-service director.

The Oklahoma Department of Corrections realized a need to set standards for prison religious programming in 1983, and Bill and Peggy moved back to Shawnee. Bill commuted to Oklahoma City in his new position of administrator of religious programs for the Department of Corrections. They left Oklahoma once again in 1986 to move to Atlanta, Georgia, where Bill served as director of institutional and business-industrial chaplaincy for the North American Mission Board. Peggy worked as a staff nurse at DeKalb General Hospital until she "hung up her cap and sensible white shoes and retired" in 1994.

Retirement brought the Donovans home to Shawnee in 1995, where they are active in First Baptist Church. Bill continues to serve as chaplain part time at Angelic Family Hospice and Heartland Hospice in Shawnee. They spend hot Oklahoma summers in South Fork, Colorado, in a home they built themselves.

The Donovans have four children, all of whom attended OBU: Cynthia Donovan-Wallis, ex '79; Stephen Donovan, ex '80; Rebecca Donovan-Bushong, '79; and Lori Donovan, ex '86.

Homecoming 2004 Offers Events for Everyone

Celebrate! Coming Home will be the focal theme for Homecoming, Friday and Saturday, Nov. 12-13. The weekend will include approximately 60 events, offering alumni and friends opportunities to revisit campus, fellowship with former classmates, and hear from current OBU students.

"We want to provide an atmosphere where alumni can celebrate being a part of the OBU family. They can catch up on the lives of old friends, as well as get a glimpse of what is happening on Bison Hill today," said Marty O'Gwynn, executive director of the OBU Alumni Association.

Graduates and former students from class years ending in "4" and "9" will have special Homecoming luncheons and reunion programs during the weekend, as they mark five-year milestone anniversaries for their classes. The celebration will begin with a 50-Year Club reception, honoring the golden anniversary of the Class of 1954, as well as reunion anniversaries for the Classes of 1934, 1939, 1944, and 1949. The Friday morning reception will be followed by a 50th anniversary luncheon for the Class of 1954, and a 50-Year Club luncheon. OBU President Mark Brister will offer brief remarks at each of the luncheons.

On Friday evening, the OBU Alumni Association's annual Alumni Achievement Awards will be presented during the Harvest Dinner in the Geiger

Center. The awards are the top honors presented by the association. In addition, the Graduate Of the Last Decade will be recognized, along with induction of new OBU Athletic Hall of Fame members. On Saturday morning, 12 alumni who are recipients of 2004 Profile In Excellence Awards, will be recognized at the Homecoming Chapel in Raley Chapel's Potter Auditorium.

The OBU Children's Festival, a new tradition launched during Homecoming 2003, will start at 10:30am Saturday. The festival offers children of alumni, age 4 through sixth grade, the opportunity to learn more about their parents' alma mater. The event will include a special worship time, carnival-style booths, and unique academic programs for grade-school children.

"Children of OBU alumni are already a part of the OBU family," said O'Gwynn. "The festival lets them learn more about the University. It also gives them a significant event that is geared totally for their interests. Our students and faculty have embraced the carnival as a vital event, and we are delighted to offer the second annual festival this year."

In addition to reunion activities and receptions for varied academic, social clubs, and special interest groups, Homecoming will showcase talents of current students and select alumni. OBU's Warren M. Angell College of Fine Arts will display some of its top talent as all six of the University's performance groups present the Homecoming Musical Gala on Friday evening. On Saturday night, the weekend will conclude with the Alumni Showcase and the Harvest Festival, which includes crowning of the 2004 Harvest Queen and King.

For details about Homecoming 2004, visit the alumni section of OBU's website. An overall schedule of events, as well as information about lodging and ordering event tickets, is available.

Nominations Open for Outstanding OBU Alumni

If you know an outstanding OBU alum, you can nominate that person for an OBU Alumni Association award. Nominations are currently open for the 2004 Graduate Of the Last Decade (GOLD) Alum of the Year award, as well as for the 2005 Profile In Excellence Award.

One GOLD Award is present annually during Harvest Dinner at Homecoming to a young alum of OBU who has demonstrated outstanding achievement and brought pride and honor to the University. The GOLD Award program was launched in 2000.

The Profile In Excellence award was created in the early 1980s to recognize alumni who have "demonstrated recognizable accomplishment" in their professions, businesses, avocations, or life service "in such a way as to bring pride and honor to the University." Each year, 12 Profile In Excellence recipients are selected and each is featured in an article in OBU Magazine.

Nomination forms for both the 2004 GOLD Alum of the Year and the 2005 Profile In Excellence Awards are available in the alumni section of the OBU website. Deadline for nominations for the honors is August 1, 2004.

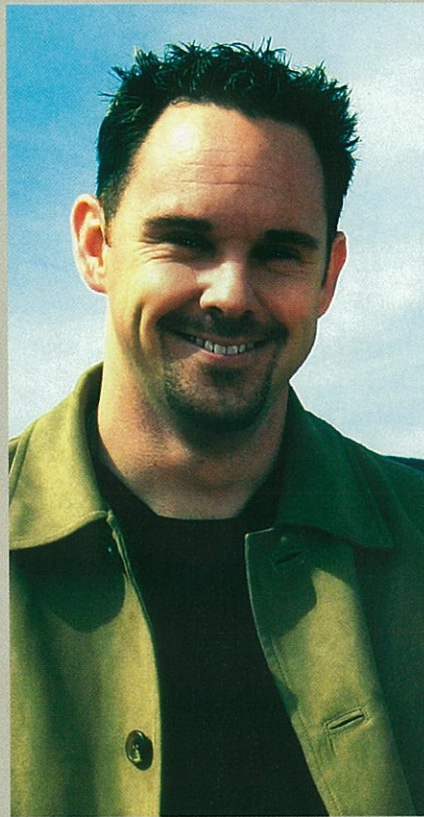

Two men wanted to each build a house. They surveyed the land and picked their spots. As knowledgeable builders, both knew that a solid foundation mattered. The first man determined that his concrete base would offset any shifting that the sand underneath might cause. The second wasn't so sure. While the first man had his foundation poured very soon, the second proceeded to dig below the surface. "I want to make sure there's something solid down there." He tried several spots close to his friend, but nothing proved firm. By this time the first man had begun framing his house. Finally, the second man struck a solid stone base under the sand. He cleared out the area, poured concrete, and began to build. His friend laughed at him. "It doesn't matter all that much," he said, "especially the way they make the materials today." The second man knew it made a significant difference, but withstood the ridicule with kind words and eventually completed his house several months after his friend. The rains came down, the streams rose, and the winds blew and beat. Jesus tells us the first man's house fell with a great crash. The second man's house did not shake because it was well built. "Everyone who hears these words of mine and does not put them into practice is like a foolish man who built his house on sand," Jesus says (Matthew 7:25-27; Luke 6: 48-49).

A Sound

M eet Jeff Click. He is a graduate of OBU with a telecommunication degree. He also learned the practical side of business when he developed Clixsounds in his dorm. "I began to customize audio on computers for fellow students and family members. This was before the web became really commercial and people had a lot of sounds for their computers," he says. "I produced sounds from instruments to human voices." Jeff began to sub-contract program development to help grow the areas that he could incorporate sounds. His talent soon brought the interest of the major corporations of AOL and Microsoft. "I designed several sound libraries used by America Online," he says, "and Microsoft is still using several of the sounds I developed for their Outlook Express program." What began as a late-night part-time job, after papers and studies were completed, turned into a training ground for the other company Jeff would start a year after graduation: Jeff Click Homes.

For the last six years Jeff has built more than 125 homes around Oklahoma City. "My experience in subcontracting program work for Clixsounds helped inform the business model of a general contractor," he says. "In addition, software design allowed me to make sense of home design because it has given me an eye for what is most intuitive. For example, I make sure to put showerheads a foot higher than most builders because I know that most men are right at six feet tall or taller. They won't need to bend down if the showerhead is higher."

With a goal of building 50 homes in 2004, Jeff could easily attribute his success to his ingenuity or business sense or willingness to learn, but he recognizes that his relationship with Jesus is truly the foundation of his work and life. "I grew up in a Christian home," he says, "and my parents taught me that God is extremely significant in whatever I do. I am surprised that some Christians separate their faith from business. They may think that God is not interested in the minute details of our careers." To help curb this in his environment, Jeff names each of his floor plans after a book in the Bible. "This just demonstrates in a small way that there is a higher calling in what I do every day."

Jeff has created other ways to incorporate his faith. "Every builder has one house that won't sell," he says. "When that happens, that house is always where my devotional is done. It is also where I often have breakthroughs in my life. That place, that house, symbolizes my need and my desire for God to help me. I know He wants me to ask Him for help." Each year the Central Oklahoma Homebuilders Association awards a builder with the opportunity to construct a home to raise money for charity. In 2004, the association awarded the contract with Jeff. "The goal is to solicit as much volunteer labor and donated products to make the margin that much greater when the house goes up for public auction," he says. "I am excited that this year, five charities that are related to children have been selected."

If he's not at a job site, Jeff may be at Life Church in Edmond, Oklahoma, where he serves on the video production team. Regarding his OBU training he credits several teachers. "I don't remember my GPA but I remember my professors, and the value of OBU increases as time goes by." He and his wife, Deziray, live in "The Corinthian II." He made sure to build on a firm foundation. All of Jeff's homes can be seen at www.jeffclickhomes.com. ♦

Foundation

It is 1966, and the Persimmon Hill Singers are hot. The name comes from the Oklahoma City hill where the Museum of Western Art is located. If you were lucky, you took a chance to hear their groove in one of the many churches where they played throughout Oklahoma. They are: Chuck Sanney (seated); Jim Runyan on guitar; Mike Richardson on bass; and Walter Grady on guitar. Chuck Sanney is Professor of Biochemistry at Oklahoma State University; Jim Runyan is a consultant for Resource Services in McKinney, Texas; Mike Richardson sings with the Pensacola Opera Chorus in Florida; Walter Grady is minister of music at First Baptist Church in Ardmore, Oklahoma.
